Manuscript page 1 (left)

Manuscript page 2 (right)

ADA:

<http://ada.usal.es> ou <http://avesta-archive.com>

This image provides a detailed view of the Avestan manuscript page V1.1. The text is written in the Pahlavi script, featuring red ink for headings or specific words. The script is cursive and organized into several lines. The paper is aged and yellowed.
